Subject:- Assessment of benefits of major and medium irrigation projects.- estimate of additional production.

Sir,

It has been common practice to indicate the area likely to be irrigated by a major or a medium irrigation projects and to estimate the increase in the food production potential anticipated on the completion of the project. There are no precise definitions of such terms as, "increase in irrigated area", "estimated increase in food product" and the differing standards adopted have a bearing on the validity of the irrigation and other benefits urged in respect of individual proje as well as in relation to the food requirements of the country.

2. In agricultural statistics, in respect of area, two distinct concepts have been defined:

(1) Net irrigated area. This represents the area irrigated from different sources, counting the area irrigated more than once in the same year only once; and

(2) Area of crops irrigated (or gross irrigated area). This is the sum of net irrigated area and area irrigated more than once in the same year.

Thus, in 1950-51 the net area irrigated from various sources in the country as a whole was about 51 million acres, but the gross irrigated area by crops was about 55.6 million acres. The figures furnished for individual irrigation projects should, therefore, indicate the best estimates available both in respect of net irrigated area and area of crops irrigated.

3. There are several considerations which have to be taken into account in estimating the irrigation benefits expected from a Project- both in terms of area and in terms of additional agricultural production These are set out below:

(1) The projects to be considered fall into three groups:

(i) Projects completed during the First Plan from which additional irrigation is expected during the second plan;

(ii) Projects expected to be completed during the second plan, including those commenced during the First Plan; and

(iii) Projects expected to be completed after the second plan, but yielding some benefit during the second plan.

(2) The net irrigated area on any large or medium project may belong to one or more of the following categories:

(i) Land newly brought under cultivation;

(ii) Land already under cultivation with dry crops brought unde irrigation; and

(iii) Irrigation being made secure or permanent on land which is previously irrigated.

(3) In estimating the net irrigated area served by a project, account has to be taken, among other things, of -

(i) area under minor irrigation works (wells, channels, etc.) which is transferred to the new source of irrigation; and

(ii) area lost to cultivation because of the requirements of land for the construction of a project (e.g. for reservoir, canals, etc.).

(4) The distribution of irrigated land between food and non-food crops will depend on several circumstances and an estimate has to be made of the area under the main crops which may be expected to be under irrigation at the end of the second five-year plan.

(5) To estimate additional production for the principal crops, a set of yardsticks have to be indicated. For the area served by each project, the State Government can suggest figures which may be adopted as yardsticks after considering data from such sources as reports relating to fixation and revision of irrigation rates, out-turns for principal crops assumed at settlement for irrigated and unirrigated land, crop-cutting experiments, records and studies of the Agriculture Department, estimates prepared for project reports, etc.

(6) Two kinds of yardsticks of additional production can be proposed - (a) those which might be applied to the additional areas under the three categories of net irrigated area mentioned in (3) above, and (b) those recommended as average figures which could be applied to the gross irrigated area expected to be under different crops at the end of the second plan. In practice it is sufficient if the second set of yardsticks (i.e. additional production per acre of irrigated land) are employed in estimating the additional production expected from different irrigation projects.

4. These various considerations have been brought together into a proforma which may kindly be completed separately for each of the major and medium irrigation projects which are being included in the State's second five-year plan.

5. A careful appraisal of the benefits anticipated from the irrigation programme now proposed for the second five-year plan is immediately relevant to the determination of the national plan for irrigation from the point of view of the food and agricultural requirements of the country. The Planning Commisson will be grateful if the suggestions made in this letter receive the urgent and joint consideration of the Planning, Irrigation, Agriculture and Revenue Departments of your State and the information requested is compiled carefully and sent by the end of November, 1955, to the Planning Commission, with copy to the Ministry of Irrigation & Power.

Yours faithfully,

Sd/-
